Smart Steps to Finding
Generous Colleges

By Lynn O'Shaughnessy

What colleges and universities are likely to give your families price breaks? You will eliminate a lot of guessing by using The Ultimate College List Builder. Here is a summary of what you'll find in this guide:

- Average price breaks at 722 private and public colleges.
- Percentage of freshmen receiving scholarships/grants at each school.
- Identity of schools where most or all freshmen receive awards.
- Average price breaks at colleges vs. universities.
- Identity of schools where many freshmen pay sticker price.
- Explanation of what all these figures mean.
- Six-step cheat sheet to finding generous colleges.

WHY YOU SHOULD USE THIS LIST

Here are two practical reasons to consult this list builder as a starting point when working with families:

The list can help you encourage families to look at a larger universe of schools.

Some of you deal with families that have their hearts set on the same dream schools. I don't need to tell you the identities of the two or three dozen schools with impossibly high rejection rates that continually make these wish lists. You live with this every day.

I suspect that one of the hardest parts of the job for some of you is tempering expectations and getting parents and teenagers to look at promising schools that don't possess the shiniest brand names.

This list can make your job easier because affluent parents can see that some or all of the schools that they are most excited about give little to no merit aid. High-income parents, for example, who can't cover the cost of an elite research university in the Northeast that doesn't give merit awards, will be able to see that many schools throughout the country would provide their children with merit scholarships.

The list can help you convey to families that merit aid isn't just for "A" students.

Many parents worry that their children must be stellar students to receive scholarships from schools.

This widespread assumption has created a tremendous amount of pressure on students to be perfect. You've no doubt encountered this first hand when talking with stressed-out parents and teenagers.

This list illustrates quite dramatically that you don't have to be an "A" student at most schools to receive help.

In reality, about two-thirds of students who attend either a public or private college or university don't pay full price thanks to federal and state grants, as well as institutional awards.

At private institutions, the odds of receiving an institutional price discount are even higher. At private colleges and universities nearly 89% of students receive scholarships and/or grants from the schools themselves. This percentage, which comes from the latest annual tuition discount survey from the National Association of College and University Business Officers, represents an historic high.

What's also at an historic level, according to the NACUBO, is the average tuition discount that freshmen are capturing at private schools. It's now at 53%. Here's an example of how to calculate this: If the tuition at a private school were $40,000, the student receiving the average discount of 53% would pay $18,800.

The discounts are so high because college is actually a buyer's market at the vast majority of institutions.

WHAT YOU NEED TO KNOW ABOUT THE LIST

I used the U.S. Department of Education database (IPEDS) to generate the line-up of schools in this document. Here are the parameters that I used for the search:

- Non-profit private colleges and universities.
- State colleges and universities.
- Campuses had a minimum of 800 students.

- Each school had to have a four-year grad rate of at least 33%. (This is the average graduation rate for state universities. Sad, but true.)

Once the search parameters generated a universe of 722 schools, I looked to see what percentage of freshmen at each of these colleges and universities received institutional grants and scholarships, as well as the average amount.

A CLOSER LOOK AT WHAT’S INSIDE THE LIST

To help you get the most out of this list, I am highlighting some important patterns to note and how you can interpret the figures.

Schools Where Many Students Pay Full Price

ELITE COLLEGES AND UNIVERSITIES

While the vast majority of students at private schools receive price discounts, this isn’t the reality at many of the most highly ranked private institutions.

To illustrate this phenomenon, I’ve pulled examples from the list builder of institutions where the percentages of students who receive price breaks are far lower than the average.

Percentage of students receiving institutional grants:

Boston College	44%	Swarthmore College	49%
Dartmouth University	44%	Haverford College	50%
Emory University	45%	University of Pennsylvania	51%
Reed College	46%	Stanford University	53%
Duke University	47%	California Institute of Technology	54%
Johns Hopkins University	47%	Northwestern University	54%
Washington University in St. Louis	47%	Amherst College	57%
Claremont McKenna College	49%	University of Notre Dame	58%
Columbia University	49%	Rice University	60%

EXPLANATION FOR LOW PERCENTAGE OF INSTITUTIONAL GRANTS

When you see private colleges and universities on the list that offer institutional grants to a relatively low percentage of students, it will usually mean one of two things:

1. The school only gives out need-based financial aid.
2. The school awards very few merit scholarships.

Institutions that score extremely high in U.S. News & World Report's college rankings don't have to try as hard to attract top students. So many wealthy students want to attend these highly rated schools that paying full price won't discourage them. Because of this strong demand, these institutions don't have to award merit scholarships or they can get by with offering a modest number.

What does this mean...

FOR FAMILIES LOOKING FOR NEED-BASED AID

Private schools that provide little or no merit scholarships can be excellent institutions for smart students who require a great deal of financial help to attend college. A middle-class or disadvantaged student who gets into a school like Pomona, Amherst, Harvard or Yale should receive an excellent financial aid package.

Don't assume, however, that all schools that provide little or no merit aid will automatically provide excellent need-based aid packages. Boston College, for instance, is typically not nearly as generous with its need-based aid packages as some other schools in its peer group.

After generating a list of potential candidates, it's extremely important that parents use an institution's net price calculator when evaluating the generosity of a particular school.

FOR FAMILIES LOOKING FOR MERIT SCHOLARSHIPS

High-income students who attend elite research universities and the most highly ranked liberal arts colleges will usually pay full price or close to it. This reality can pose a dilemma if you are helping smart, wealthy students who are aiming for elite schools, but whose parents have not saved enough to pay for a school that costs $60,000 a year or more.

High-income families, who find themselves in this predicament, should expand their search and look for schools that will provide wealthy students with merit scholarships. As The Ultimate College List Builder shows, most schools fall into this category.

Plenty of well-off parents unfortunately choose other options when their children get into trophy schools that they believe merit extreme financial sacrifices. They end up taking actions such as borrowing large amounts for college, raiding their retirement accounts and/or dipping into college accounts for a younger sibling(s). I've even heard of parents selling their home to enable their children to attend their dream schools.

Please discourage parents from taking these drastic steps!

Other Schools Where Many Pay Full Price

ART SCHOOLS AND MUSIC CONSERVATORIES

Beyond the elite schools, other institutions that are more likely to require a large percentage of students to pay full price or close to it are stand-alone art schools and music conservatories. Every year, the U.S. Department of Education releases lists of schools that charge the highest net price (cost of attendance minus the typical scholarships and grants) and every year the institutions that make this hall of shame list include a significant number of art and music schools.

You can find the top 5% of private and public institutions that charge the highest net prices by visiting the U.S. Department of Education's College Affordability and Transparency Center.

Unlike the most elite institutions, art schools and music conservatories often provide poor need-based aid. Here are a few of these schools with the percentage of students who receive some type of institutional discount.

Rhode Island College of Design	34%
Berklee College of Music	43%
Ringling College of Art and Design	63%
California Institute of the Arts	63%

Also keep in mind that specialty schools that offer price breaks to many of their students will often dispense mediocre merit awards that make the price of these institutions prohibitively expensive for many families.

Schools Where Price Breaks are Plentiful

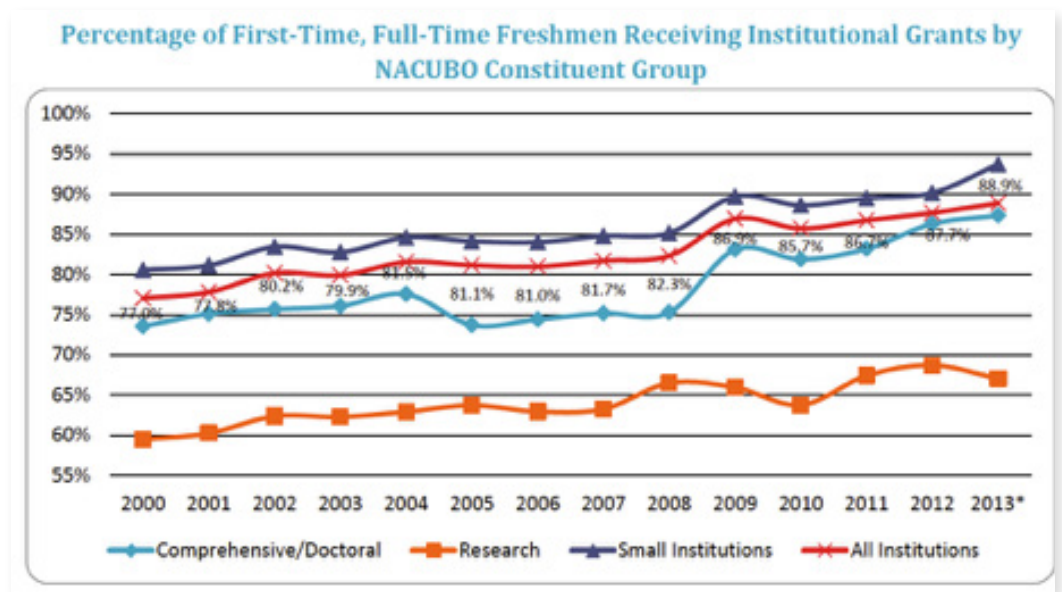

COLLEGES AND MASTER’S-LEVEL UNIVERSITIES

The schools that provide most or even all freshmen with price discounts will typically be liberal arts and baccalaureate colleges, as well as master’s-level universities, where there are few PhD programs. In contrast, the schools least likely to provide merit scholarships are research universities.

Colleges and master’s-level universities have to work harder by offering discounts to attract students because they typically don’t possess national brand names like so many research universities enjoy.

In its latest annual tuition study, the NACUBO produced an eye-opening chart that illustrates just who is providing discounts to freshmen. While nearly 89% of all private schools provide discounts, roughly 94% of colleges (listed here as small institutions) award price breaks.

At master’s level universities (referred to here as comprehensive/doctoral level universities), the percentage is also high at approximately 88%. In contrast, at research universities an estimated 66% of students receive a tuition discount.

To learn more about this phenomenon, read this post:

Colleges vs. Universities: Which Are Bargains?

Here is a small sampling of institutions where the majority of students receive a price break:

When the Statistics Are Less Reliable

STATE UNIVERSITIES

Unlike private institutions, state universities usually don't provide as large a percentage of its freshmen with price cuts. State universities are priced lower than private institutions so they don't need to offer as many discounts. In fact, one reason why private schools discount is to become competitive with state universities on price.

The percentage of students receiving institutional grants from these public schools won't necessarily provide the same helpful roadmap as the private institutions' aid practices.

This is because in some states the bulk of the aid comes from the state governments rather than the schools themselves.

Turning to the same IPEDS data that was used to generate the overall list, I discovered that only 32% of freshmen received institutional grants or scholarships at the University of Florida. This is misleading, however, because a stunning 91% of students at the U. of Florida received grants or scholarships from the state.

UNIVERSITY OF FLORIDA

TYPE OF AID	NUMBER RECEIVING AID	PERCENT RECEIVING AID

Grant or scholarship aid	5,948	95%
Federal grants	1,833	29%

Institutional grants or scholarships	2,017	32%
Student loan aid	1,855	30%
Federal student loans	1,854	30%
Other student loans	74	1%

Some state programs are centralized which means the bulk of the awards are set by formulas on the state level. States that use this system include California, New York and South Carolina.

Other states have a decentralized program—the governments set basic eligibility criteria but they provide the funding to the schools that exercise some discretion when making awards. States in this category include Colorado, Texas and Virginia.

Other states have a decentralized program—the

I'm using Virginia Tech to illustrate a school where the percentage of students who receive aid from either the state or the institution itself is rather low. The percentage of students who receive awards from either the state of Virginia or Virginia Tech is significantly smaller than at the University of Florida.

Perhaps not surprisingly, Virginia Tech shares company with the five percent of state institutions that charge the highest net prices.

Finding More Information on State Aid Programs

You can obtain links to the aid programs in the 50 states by visiting the website of the National Association of Student Financial Aid Administrators.

YOUR NEXT STEP IN RESEARCHING A COLLEGE'S GENEROSITY

Checking the odds of receiving a price cut at a particular school is only part of your task. You should also look at what the average need-based financial aid packages and merit scholarships are at an institution and compare that with the school's cost of attendance. (The list builder provides an average award, but these federal figures don't differentiate between need-based aid and merit aid.)

Let's take a look at why this is important by using two schools that both say they typically meet 91% of a freshmen's demonstrated financial need. (You'll learn shortly how to obtain the financial need figures, as well as merit aid numbers.)

COLLEGE OF IDAHO

This is a liberal arts college with some of the most highly rated professors in the country, according to student surveys conducted by the Princeton Review.

NORTHEASTERN UNIVERSITY

This Boston school is one of the hottest schools in the country due largely to its coop program.

Here are the average merit awards at the two schools:

College of Idaho	$16,313
Northeastern University	$20,784

While the Northeastern scholarship looks more generous, the school costs considerably more so it doesn't make as big a dent in the price.

Net price

When I subtract the average merit award from each school's tuition and room/board charges these are the net prices:

College of Idaho	$18,842
Northeastern University	$39,746

Look Closer at Prices

Examining the percentage of students who receive a discount, what the average discounts are and the cost of attendance at individual schools can help you generate promising prospects.

You can discover a school's average merit scholarship and average need-based aid award, as well as the school's price tag, by heading to the College Board's website and taking the following steps:

Type in the name of any school in the College Board's search box and then click on the Paying tab located on the left hand side of the institution's profile.

Clicking on the Paying link will bring you to the page with the school's published cost of attendance. If you are looking at a state university for a nonresident, be sure to click on the Out-of-State Costs button.

At the top of this page, click on the hyperlink entitled, Financial Aid by the Numbers.

The screenshot shows a website interface with navigation tabs at the top: "Cost of Attendance", "How to Apply for Financial Aid", "Financial Aid By the Numbers" (highlighted with a red arrow), and "Scholarships". Below the tabs is the heading "Published Annual College Costs Before Financial Aid (Fall 2015 First Year Students)". Underneath, there are two buttons: "In-State Costs" (highlighted) and "Out-Of-State Costs". A table displays costs for "On Campus", "Off Campus", and "At Home" for "Tuition and fees" and "Room and board". A text box on the right explains that the net price is the cost of attendance minus aid.

	On Campus	Off Campus	At Home
Tuition and fees	$45,050	$45,050	$45,050
Room and board	$7,890	--	--

You'll want to check several statistics on the Financial Aid by the Numbers page.

Look first at the statistic that says what percentage of financial need the school meets. I am using Beloit College, my son's alma mater, to illustrate this.

Beloit says it typically meets 93% of a student's demonstrated financial need. Ideally, you'd want schools that meet 100% of need, but there are only a few dozen institutions in the entire country that can promise that. Beloit's 93% figure is definitely better than what most schools offer.

The pie chart (see below) illustrates how the school's typical financial aid package is broken down between free money (scholarships and grants) and loans/jobs. The jobs in the pie charts refer to federal work-study positions.

The chart says 77% of Beloit's undergrad awards are typically devoted to scholarships and grants.

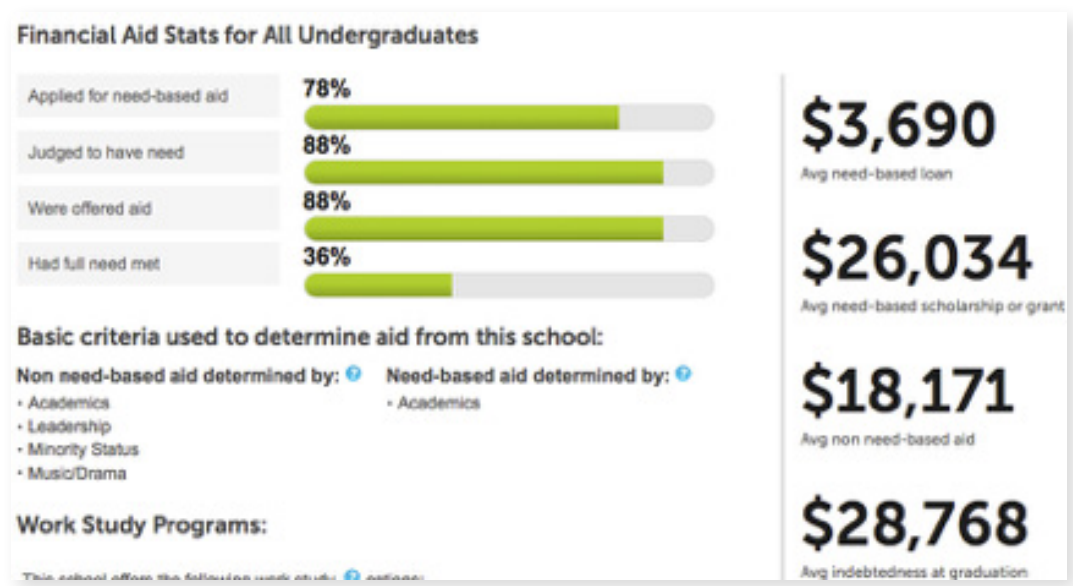

Keep in mind that schools self report these figures and sometimes the pie chart numbers looks more generous than the average need-based aid award would suggest.

Scroll down on the page to discover financial aid statistics for all undergrads. Pay particular attention to the average need-based scholarships/grants figure, as well as the average merit scholarship (referred to as non-need-based aid).

Also pay attention to the percentage of students who had their full financial need met. At Beloit, 36% of students fit into this category. Ideally, 100% of students at a school will have their full need met, but it's rare for all but the most elite schools to pull this off.

The Ultimate College Builder Cheat Sheet

Use The Ultimate College List Builder to help you identify schools that could represent financial fits for your families. Here are six steps to follow:

Pay attention to schools on the list builder that provide a large percentage of students with discounts. Students will enjoy better odds of receiving a price cut at these institutions.

With the list builder note what a school's average award is and compare that figure to the price of the institution. Keep in mind that the average awards you see on the list builder do not separate out merit aid from need-based aid, but the College Board does provide this information, as well as the cost of attendance.

If financial aid is a necessity and the child is a stellar student, also check out the schools on the list builder that chiefly or exclusively dispense need-based aid. You will find these schools (nearly all elite institutions) among those that provide a lower percentage of students with price cuts.

You need to focus on more than just the percentage of students who receive scholarships or grants and the average amounts. Look at what a school's average merit aid and average need-based awards are. The College Board's website provides this information via a school's profile. While on the College Board check out the percentage of demonstrated financial need the school typically meets, as well as what percentage of students get their full need met.

It's crucial that you tell parents to use a net price calculator for each school that interests their teenager. Average awards can be a helpful guide, but parents need to get a firm estimate of what a particular school will cost them before their child applies.

Ideally, you won't finalize a college list until you hear from the parents with their net price calculator results.
